

FELLOWSHIP AND SCHOLARSHIP WINNERS 2016-2017

The following is a list of the winners of all GSAS-administered fellowship competitions. It does not include the winners of the many non-GSAS fellowship competitions and may not indicate where students have declined the award.

GRADUATE STUDENTS WIN FULBRIGHT GRANTS FOR RESEARCH ABROAD

A total of eight Cultural Exchange Fulbright grants from the Institute of International Education (IIE) were made to GSAS students that will allow them to conduct dissertation or other advanced research abroad next year. Below are the students and their topics:

IIE Fulbright Awards

Peter Bernard, East Asian Languages and Civilizations

Rural Japanese Gothic: Geographies of Terror in Modern Japanese Literature

I propose to use the concept of the “rural Gothic” to reassess the importance of non-urban spaces in modern Japanese literature. This project seeks to answer the following question: why has the countryside, as a site of terror and disorientation, haunted the Japanese imagination so insistently? I will work with experts in the Faculty of Letters at Keio University in Tokyo, as well as conduct fieldwork using local literary archives outside of Tokyo.

Vivien Chung, Anthropology

The Power of Style: The Performances of Fashion on Seoul, South Korea

I propose to research the strivings of South Koreans to harness the power of “style” in their performances of “fashion” by conducting anthropological field research in Seoul, South Korea. My research focuses on the activities of small-scale entrepreneurs, whose survival in the market depends on their ability to become urban trendsetters, in the context of South Korea bidding to enhance its world status by cultivating “soft power.”

Joshua Freeman, Inner Asian and Altaic Studies

Print Communism: Uyghur Cultural History Between China and the USSR

In a year of research in Kazakhstan, I plan to use sources in archives, libraries, and private collections to reconstruct the emergence and development of modern Uyghur literature in the early decades of the Soviet Union. I will thereby lay the groundwork for a dissertation exploring the creation of Uyghur literary canon in the USSR and China, and the ways in which Uyghur writers used the canon as a means to project a vision for their nation.

Ryan Glasnovich, East Asian Languages and Civilizations

Return to the Sword: Martial Identity and the 19th-century Transformation of the Japanese Police

My project argues that the unique social identity of the Tokyo police that developed during the early years of the Meiji era (1868-1912) played a crucial role in shaping the oppressive nature of the imperial Japanese state. This martial identity set the standard by which the state would interact with the people throughout the prewar period. I propose to spend nine months in Tokyo gathering materials and consulting with local scholars.

Sophia Nasti, South Asian Studies

Genre Innovation and Transformation in the Works of a Beloved Tamil Saint

This project focuses on Saiva poet-saint Manikkavacakar and fieldwork will be conducted in Tamil Nadu, India. My project seeks to investigate genre innovation and transformation as strategies used by religious communities to define and situate themselves in larger cultural contexts. Manikkavacakar’s works challenge boundaries of classical genre theorization and require new readings strategies to understand their significance.

Nicolas Roth, South Asian Studies

Marigolds and Munshis: Horticultural Writing and South Asian Garden Culture, 17th-18th C.

My dissertation explores the garden culture of 17th- and 18th-century South Asia, encompassing the material practices of horticulture and how South Asian societies related to them intellectually. Through a critical study of technical treatises in Sanskrit, Persian, and Hindi-Urdu in Indian archives, it will illuminate the evolving material and intellectual cultures of early modern South Asia and their little studied production of technical literature.

Rachel Thompson, Anthropology

Jakarta, Sinking City: The Socio-Ecology of a Flood-Prone Metropolis

My project is a historical and ethnographic study of the socio-ecological complexity of Jakarta, a city beset with increasing threats of catastrophic flooding. I track the prehistory and planning of a postcolonial project of hydro-diplomacy – the Dutch-led NCICD Master Plan – and its intersection with competing visions for the future of the water-logged city.

Jonathan Weigel, Political Economy and Government

Tracking Taxes: A Randomized Evaluation of a Government Anti-Corruption Intervention

I propose a randomized evaluation of a government anti-corruption intervention in Kananga, Congo-Kinshasa. The project is policy relevant because the intervention is cheap and, if effective, could be easily scaled up. It is of academic interest because I can use the random variation in tax levels to test hypotheses about the role of taxation in political engagement and state building, and about the effects of technology on the “culture of corruption.”
